The Harvesters

The harvest is ended, the harvest of wheat, and toilers who wended around in the heat, at stacking and shocking and loading racks, are cityward walking, with aches in their backs; they're cheerfully going where rubles are burned, intent upon blowing the money they earned. They labored like thunder their money to get; you'd think from that plunder they'd part with regret; you'd think they would save it, and, when it must go, with teardrops they'd lave it, the teardrops of But that sort of action would give them a pain; there's no satisfaction in anything sane. Their thoughts they are giving to painting the earth, to nights of high living and wassail and mirth. And that is the reason why hoboes abound; in harvesting season ten million are found. The children of sorrow, who never can win, all thoughts of the morrow connected with gin. When farmers are calling for help, for their wheat, you see the bums falling all over their feet; you see them come drilling from alley and mews, to sweat for a shilling and blow it for booze.
